

How to Get Along with White People: A 42-year-old Black Woman Shares Her Wisdom About Being Around Whites (Essays on Fire)

Yes, a provocative title in the midst of a world seemingly gone mad lately. A white guy named John Derbyshire gets fired from the National Review for advising whites to stay away from large groups of black people, and I cant get his honestly laid bare (if not shocking) words out of my head. Heavily armed Neo-Nazis may or may not be patrolling Sanford, Florida, depending on what news outlet you read. The racial tension feels as taut as the inner tube on my mountain bike that I filled this morning before heading out for my nine-mile trek through Cuyahoga Valley National Park in Ohio, past a microcosm of white folks - my own private focus group of interaction with Caucasians. Its under those beautiful heavens this Easter Monday that the title and theme of this piece was borne - me, a 42-year-old African American woman noting the advice Id give any other black person on how to get along with white people in this day and age. The Angry Black People I can hear my mothers voice from beyond the grave right now, retorting with one of her bold comebacks, like when I warned her to drive more defensively, and watch out for a coming car. Theyd better watch for me! she said. Why not write How to Get Along with Black People geared towards whites, the chorus of readers and tweeters may sing. Thanks. That may be my next viral article. But this is the one that came in full to me today. Lets talk about angry black people first - and what some have experienced with whites that they let infect their everyday existence. How Can Black People Tell When Their Faces are Dirty? Some blacks have every right to be upset. As do some whites. Racial hurts can cut deep. As a little girl, my grandmother remembered seeing her own grandmother up on the slave auction block - a photographic memory that she recounted to me more than 80 years later. But it didnt seem to embitter her. No, GranRuby had a lot more

Jesus than others. Her husband, however, felt more betrayed by whites. Lord knows the types of horrors my grandfather - whom we affectionately called Daddy Elmer - may have witnessed growing up in Wetumpka, Alabama, in the 1920s. That's why I thought it odd that a seemingly less-hurtful-than-lynching memory stuck with him the most, enough to regale me with the tale of him sitting at the table as a young boy with a white family that he worked for to take a break and eat. Oh Elmer, admonished the white matron of the house. You know you're not allowed to sit at the table and eat with us. On to my mom's racist episodes. The Real Mad Men When her parents move to Chicago as part of the Great Migration, and my mom integrated a lily white downtown law firm as the first black secretary, she experienced her own. It's always darkest before dawn quips, like those levied against the first black secretary on Mad Men. (When you read this Matt Weiner, put me in your writer's room - I've got lines that'll rival that repeatably-funny Is it just me or is the lobby full of Negros? for days) Speaking of which, one is the subhead question that one of her coworkers asked my mom, querying, Thelma - how can black people tell when their faces are dirty? My mother was highly offended. Instead, my sister and I thought she should've answered the question - one perhaps birthed out of curiosity, not necessarily hatred. Heck, I'll answer it now.
